Project Summary: Young academics in the field of Political Science and International Relations (PSIR) face various difficulties in the early stages of their teaching careers because they cannot find the opportunity to receive pedagogical training during their postgraduate education. This situation negatively affects both the learning experiences of students and makes it difficult for academicians to effectively manage their teaching processes. The aim of this training program is to help young academicians learn innovative and effective teaching techniques in order to eliminate this deficiency. The program aims to enrich students' learning experiences by enabling academicians to create more efficient and effective teaching processes in classroom and distance education.
